question; what is at the perimeter that is less than nothing The problem with expansion has come about early last century misinterpreting data assuming it to be galaxies receding from one another, then relativism got lost in the in space - losing track that space is the vacuum and made the next blunder by assuming space is an entity that can shrink and grow by ignoring the fact it is the vacuum - then compounded their blunder by an extension of the vacuous vacuum expanding because at the The Discontented Butler the vacuum ceased to exist as nothing exist past the expansion perimeter What is the vacuum, it is not an entity, not Aether, cannot shrink and grow - it is nothing The Discontented Butler proponents of past the perimeter of expanding galaxies what exactly do these relativists propose is taking place as the galaxies continue their relentless velocity in the vacuum Are they saying a vacuum which is absolutely zero nothing is continually created as this fails to answer the question.
